

Financial Disputes Group

The Group

Taylor Wessing's Financial Disputes Group acts for a wide variety of clients involved in financial services and also handles contentious financial matters for many other blue-chip commercial clients.

The group is drawn from industry experts, all with specialist knowledge of various aspects of the financial services industry giving the group depth of knowledge and the ability to deal with any financial services, securities, commodity, trade finance or regulatory issues.

Our experience

Lawyers in the group have an understanding of national and international markets and experience dealing with all aspects of contentious financial matters, including litigation, arbitration, disciplinary hearings, class-actions and investigatory, disciplinary or enforcement action by regulators.

The group has extensive experience with cross-border disputes, having a presence in the major financial centres in Europe.

Making a difference

We provide clear and practical advice as needed by companies confronted by complex regulations in domestic and international markets. The group provides ongoing risk management advice in relation to issues arising out of regulatory requirements and the systems and controls that companies need to have in place.

Working closely with our finance team, the financial disputes group is well placed to advise on the options available to reduce risk, from structuring operations to avoid regulation, to complying with applicable regulatory schemes and legislative requirements.

We recognise that managing risk is essential to corporations and financial institutions and our specialists in the key financial centres enable us to provide co-ordinated advice on cross-border issues which threaten litigation or intervention by the regulator.
